heard of its tabplous cheapness, and that to him is the greatest boon that can be conferred on the German peastry. Why should he toil on in poverty, when there are unnumbered acres of land awaiting an owner in America?

He does not stop to think much further than this. He has no fears of his ability to live and thrive on his land, when once he owns it. The main point is the getting of it, and his own strong arm will make a living and provide for his family. He takes a change, but mue cases out of ten, the German immigrant succeeds where any nine cases out of ten, the German immigrant succeeds where any ether nationality would fail. He gets his land and he is happy. No power of reasoning can convince him that there is any other road to wealth than the presistent tilling of the soil. And so he works on, year after year, and he always "gains on it." Seldom do we hear of a German farmer going into the bankraptey. As a rule, the to bankruptey. is in the estimation of some people no worse thing than a mortgage on a farm. The interest is a great cause of trouble and the payment cause of trouble and the payment of the principal is fearful to contem late. But there are forse things than the mortgage on the farm, worse trouble than the payment of interest, and many a worse thing to contemplate than the final payment of it. Men borrow a good deal besides money that is worse to pay than a mortgage. They borrow a heap of trouble, they fret and worry and are anxious, and make their wives and families do make their wives and families do make their wives and immites do the same. Just before completing the work, a hen flew down from the scaffold where the oats had been stored, and went out from the barn. After the machine was removed to a neighbor's, I saw the same hen come upon the floor, and begin scratching among the oats and chaff. My brother told me to scare her away, but I thought she wanted to lay, so we kept still and watched her. She quickly made a nest, and in about two minutes arose, cackled, and went off a few steps, then re-
